

Local American Legion Post #136 Hosts 25th Public Safety Awards

by Carol Griffith

Post 136 of the American Legion held its 25th annual celebration of Greenbelt's distinguished public servants on November 2 at the Post home on Greenbelt Road. The Greenbelt Volunteer Fire Department and Rescue Squad (GVFD); Greenbelt Police Department; the United States Park Police, Greenbelt Station; and the Greenbelt Public Works Department each chose an employee who serves with honor, pride and commitment. Each received a standing ovation.

Officials of the American Legion attending included the Bob Ouellette, commander of the Southern Maryland District; Post 136 Commander Michael Moore, who presented honorees with awards from the American Legion; and Joe Williams, chair of the Public Service Committee of the Legion. Mayor Judith Davis and Councilmembers Leta Mach, Silke Pope, Edward Putens and Konrad Herling represented the City of Greenbelt. Council aided in presenting a Greenbelt City Proclamation to each award recipient. District 4 County Councilmember In-

Commendation

Greenbelt Police Department Chief James Craze began by presenting this year's Law Enforcement Officer of the Year award and a Class One Commendation.

MPO Barry Byers received the commendation for assisting with the apprehension of an armed man wanted for the abduction of a citizen and attempted murder of a police officer. Craze related the story of how Byers responded to a call from Riverdale Park police for assistance in locating the suspect and, acting on instinct, found the suspect in a dark cramped stairwell. A violent hand-to-hand fight ensued as the suspect tried to take Byers' weapon. Nevertheless, Byers was able to take the suspect into custody.

Greendale Named National Historic Landmark

by James Giese

Greenbelt is not alone in celebrating its 75th anniversary. Its two sister cities, Greendale, Wisconsin, and Greenhills, Ohio, completed slightly later than Greenbelt, will be celebrating next year. Right now, Greendale is forming its 75th anniversary committee. In preparation for that celebration, Greendale recently achieved recognition as a National Historic Landmark, a designation obtained by Greenbelt in 1997. The following is an excerpt of an article about Greendale appearing in the November 15, 2012, issue of the Current Highlights newsletter of the Wisconsin Historical Society.

Hundreds of buildings in the historic village of Greendale have officially been designated part of the Greendale Historic District National Historic Landmark by Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar. There are fewer than 2,500 National Historic Landmarks across the country and all possess exceptional value and quality in illustrating or interpreting the heritage of the United States.

Greendale, along with Greenbelt and Greenhills, is one of three government-sponsored "greenbelt" communities built during the Great Depression in response to desperate unemployment and urgent need for housing reform for the urban working class. Out of 100 major industrial cities considered for an experimental greenbelt town, Milwaukee was chosen for its varied and stable manufacturing sector, inexpensive peripheral land and progressive political climate. Preliminary plans were finished in March 1936 and the first model house opened in February 1937. Greendale was built under the Resettlement Administration, the Farm Security Administration and with the assistance of labor funded by the Works Progress Administration.

Original Plan

The original plan for the community employed several innovative planning concepts. Residential areas were laid out within irregular "superblocks" with housing clustered along narrow residential lanes. Parks and common greenspace flowed through and along the edges of each superblock. Paved walkways separated pedestrian from vehicular traffic. Houses

Mary Lou Williamson – Editor Extraordinaire

At the Greenbelt News Review 75th Anniversary Banquet on November 18, Mary Lou Williamson was recognized for her 50 years of service to Greenbelt as a member of the News Review staff, of which more than 40 years have been as the paper's editor. Williamson was presented with a six-page tribute prepared by Sandra Lange, copies of which were provided to all attending the ceremony. Below are selected excerpts from that tribute.

Through the window of my new neighbor's house I could see a bookcase filled with books. And I needed just one poem. Time to get acquainted. That's how I met Mary Lou. Besides books, what did we have in common? The same neighborhood in Chicago – I at the University, she at its nationally recognized University High School. And then, the News Review. Credit me with recruiting our long-time editor. We started on Wednesday nights doing the lay-out, proofing copy.

– Virginia Beauchamp

I first met Mary Lou when she lived in the 45 Court of Ridge Road where several other News Review staffers also lived. My family lived there too, before we moved to Northway. Mary Lou started working on the special 25th Anniversary booklet.

Council Discusses New Pit Bull Court Decision

by Jonathan Taylor

At its November 13 regular meeting, a full Greenbelt City Council sank its teeth into the consequences of a new ruling by the Maryland Court of Appeals that found pit bulls "inherently dangerous." The ruling, however, raised questions about how far such liability goes when a pit bull bites someone.

"It has to do with the extension of the liability," Councilmember Edward Putens said, "beyond the owner and, if you're renting, beyond the landlord – and extending it into the homeowners' association."

Putens cited an existing Prince George's County pit bull law that he felt precluded any expansion of liability beyond the owner or landlord and made it unnecessary for Greenbelt's condominiums, co-ops and homeowner associations to secure additional legal protections.

The city's chief legal adviser, John F. Shay, however, brought up a scenario under which an entity like Greenbelt Homes, Inc. could get sued despite that law, thanks to the court's new ruling.

"As of right now, Shay said, [the ruling] 'has not been extended to either condo associations or co-ops; but if a co-op has a board of directors and the co-op can control the presence of animals on the property, and the board has prior knowledge that somebody's harboring a pit bull, I don't know what the court's going to say but I can guarantee you if that pit bull bites somebody, the co-op is going to get sued."

Noting council's strong interest in the issue, the "paranoia" and "confusion" in some quarters and the difficulty of prescribing a fix, Putens suggested council add the issue to its legislative agenda. (The agenda is a set of topics council will take up with the Maryland State Legislature in the upcoming session.) With the general sense that this would be a helpful step, discussion ended.

Covenants

In addition to unleashing the pit bull issue, council also approved revisions to the Greenbelt South Core Covenants, making sure the city's development goals for the South Core will now "run with the land." (The South Core is that section of undeveloped land south of the Metro site to Greenbelt Road.) Council also made official its support for two pieces of county legislation aimed at improving the environment and accommodating non-motorized transit (CB-83-2012 and CB-87-2012).

Curfew Rejected

Finally, the agenda included a Greenbelt Youth Advisory Committee report on its consideration of a request from Windsor Green residents for a city-wide curfew but the issue was not discussed. Voting 5-0, the committee "currently sees no need for a city-wide curfew law." City staff recommended that council consider the topic at a future meeting.

Letters

Thanks to the Many!

What a terrific week we’ve just had with the 24-page News Review loaded with all the interesting bits of history from the past 75 years – both of the newspaper itself and of the city. To top that off we had a fabulous party at the Marriott Sunday night with our co-workers and friends and supporters – 138 strong and sinfully good chocolate cake.

Thanks to everyone who helped with those huge responsibilities over many weeks and more.

And most especially thank you to those who contributed to the celebration of my years with the newspaper and to Sandra Lange who organized that effort and put it together with many photos. It’s a keepsake.

The Labor Day Story

Labor Day weekend brings a challenge

For your transportation you must manage.

You can’t leave town in your car For having to re-park it afar.

A spot on your street can’t be found

Cars from other cities abound.

The city planners figured out That your car you have to do without.

Staying in Greenbelt is what you must do

Giving the city support and finance, too,

By doing the activity now the best

Walking on down and enjoying the Fest.

Corrections

The box on page 1 of the special insert anniversary issue last week (A-1) attempted to give years of service for our treasured, essential volunteer staff. It was imprecise but we did not mean to put Anne and Jon Gardner, who have served for nearly 10 years in the “under 5 years” category. Our apologies, Gardners, both of you – your services are greatly valued and definitely stretch back farther than where you show up on the list.

And to our horror, we entirely left out one very important member of our Ad Desk team, Jessi Britton, with five + years working on and organizing that job, as well as almost singlehandedly forming the current Ad Desk team who greet and help advertisers and everyone coming into the office. Anyone else? Please say something!

The Silver Diner congratulatory ad incorrectly reported the address and phone number for the restaurant. The address is 6040 Greenbelt Road and the phone number is 301-220-0028.

In the headline on the article about Jean D’Esposito’s 100th birthday by Kathleen McFarland on page 7 last week, our final editors somehow managed to overlook the misspelling of the honoree’s name. Excuse our red faces. . . .

Condolences to the family and friends of former Greenbelt Fred Baluch, 88, who died November 18, 2012. Greenbelt was saddened to learn of the death of William Griffin on November 15, 2012.

Congratulations to:
– Greenbelt dog trainer Allie Lee for his work with therapy dogs at Children’s Hospital. There is a heart-warming story about the program and the part played by Allie’s late wife Adele in its creation in John Kelly’s column in the Washington Post Metro section Monday, November 19.

nights Mary Lou would stay at the News Review office until 1 or 2 a.m. Then, she would get up early to go to the print shop the next morning. Those were tough times – especially because the News Review basement office had no bathroom and many of us were pregnant during those early years.

Without Mary Lou I believe the News Review would not be in business. She is so knowledgeable about how to deal with people. She knows all aspects of the newspaper business. She is very kind and strong.

– Elaine Skolnik

I first met Mary Lou when I joined the News Review staff in 1966. But I didn’t really get to know her until the 1970s when I started doing make up in my home. She would show up at 9 p.m., examine the front-page layout, move stories around, gently asserting her editor’s prerogatives. During our hours together we discovered that we shared a passion for gardening, and our friendship flourished.

– Sandra Lange

My first recollection of meeting Mary Lou Williamson was in 1977. I was co-chair of the Greenbelt Labor Day Festival’s Talent Show along with Debbie Hibbs. We decided to write an article to help attract participants, which translated to bringing the article to the News Review. I walked with nervous energy down the steps of 15 Parkway where the paper’s office was located for many years. I opened the door and saw more Smith Coronas in action than I had ever seen before. My ears had a new appreciation of the term, “clickety-clak”. . . . It was as if I had discovered Greenbelt’s underground where the real thinking about vital issues took place.

Eventually someone asked me, “May we help you?” I replied that I had an article about the Labor Day Festival which I wanted to submit. I was directed to Mary Lou who said, “Let’s take a look at what you’ve got.” As she edited my article, I observed the fine eye and mind of a great editor at work. When she was done, she instructed me to find an available typewriter. Then I too became part of the Smith Corona cacophony of clicking and clacking.

– Konrad Herling

I first met her in the basement office on Parkway in 1992 when I showed up to proofread and came to know her pivotal role in keeping the paper running smoothly and publishing week after week. That’s 2,600 weeks in a row of dedication if you do the math and try to imagine fitting in a lifetime of work, family, community over the same span.

Not long after I showed up she quietly mentioned one time she was returning from a bout with breast cancer . . . followed in the next year or so by a disclosure she was facing the illness and death of her only sibling, then the assumption of parenthood for grand niece Sophia after her “first” family was raised. Not long after was a huge move of the paper above ground and into the far more spacious old kindergarten classroom in the Community Center along with other big changes, including transition from old hot-lead type and make-up with waxed galleys. Too soon, her beloved Jim was to die, presenting her with the life dilemma of “what now?” And Mary Lou has soared, managing to expand her life, her home, her garden, her pond, . . . all while leading the News Review week after week.

– Eileen Farnham

It’s hard to think of the Greenbelt News Review without Mary Lou Williamson. She knows every aspect of the paper’s operation from writing and editing stories, selling ads, billing issues, layout and circulation. She led the paper in its transition from Linotype to computer composition. She encourages staff to try new aspects of the operation such as editing or layout operations. With no paychecks or supervisory hierarchy behind her, she leads through persuasion, cajolery or flattery. . . .

If I had to describe her in just one word, it would be “unflappable,” but one word would just not be sufficient. She is a leader, a friend, courageous and much, much more.

– Diane Oberg

There may be a dozen or more staff at work, all with questions or comments for the editor. Advertisers and citizens drop in and they, too, want to talk to the editor. Then there are the many telephone calls. Besides listening to all and making whatever editorial decisions are needed, Mary Lou reads over nearly all copy, making final editorial corrections and checking out the headlines, before it is sent out for composition.

On occasion, Mary Lou has to deal with upset individuals – the paid ad had the wrong information, the facts of a story were inaccurate, an article maligned someone or a writer’s story was edited in a manner not to the author’s liking. Mary Lou calmly listens, apologizes when needed or stays the course, if that is the way to go, but always keeps her cool.

On top of putting the paper together weekly, Mary Lou handles the many details of running the operation – dealing with city staff about the use of city space, arranging for cleaning services, buying supplies, getting technical help when needed and performing such non-managerial duties as getting a door bell installed or buying pizza for a board meeting.

– Jim Giese

I was the first one to know the total amount of money the News Review made from its ads . . .

I would walk up behind her, give her a nudge. She would react with a thumbs-up for large amounts and a whispered explanation for real low amounts. These amounts determine the number of pages in an issue.

– Leonie Penney

At the helm, Mary Lou has an uncanny knack for motivating a very diverse group of volunteers to put forth a valiant effort on a regular basis. They are a committed bunch who look to Mary Lou for her journalistic expertise, institutional memory, modest leadership style, solid gut instincts, positive outlook and, with a lifetime of community service, as role model extraordinaire. With a one-of-a-kind personality and a great deal of patience she handily flexes to accomplish the day-to-day challenges posed by staffing, scheduling, financial and community needs. She is tough when she needs to be tough; she is sensitive when she needs to be sensitive. And she is ready and willing to do whatever it takes – be it work late into the night, drive to take a photo or pick up an ad or volunteer or hit the keyboard to write the story herself – to ensure that all of Greenbelt can rely on a reputable and independent community newspaper. I know that she takes great pride and great satisfaction in the work she has put into the News Review. We are all the better for it.

– Lynn Eppard,
desktop publishing contractor

[Mary Lou has] been a wonderful mentor and role model for me. When I came to the News Review 15 years ago, I was at a very low point in my life. [Her] confidence and belief in me was pivotal. Turning in assignments each week became a high point.

I have also had the opportunity to observe [her] making hard as well as delicate decisions as the newspaper’s leader. These instances have left an indelible mark on me as to what a woman can do in a man’s world.

– Altoria Ross

Mary Lou Williamson plays an important role in working with University of Maryland student writers, seeking bylines in local newspapers. Writing for the Greenbelt News Review is an entirely different experience than writing for other news outlets, largely because of Mary Lou. She makes the volunteer relationship one of mutual respect and benefit. She is understanding of what the students need and makes accommodations for class clip requirements. If a story a student is working on falls through, she assigns another for the same week – even if she doesn’t necessarily need it – and she waits late into the night for the stories to come in. If she has a correction, it is never a criticism.

– Jessica Wilde,
UMD journalism student

The newspaper goes from crisis to crisis, but Mary Lou remains calm and serene. I’ve never known her to lose her temper or get agitated. She is also an optimist. You can tell her that the paper will go bonkers unless something drastic is done and she’ll respond, “Oh, it all will work out,” and damned if it doesn’t. Many of us worry as to what will happen to the News Review when Mary Lou finally steps down but Mary Lou will tell you, “Oh, it will all work out,” and it probably will. But it won’t be the same.

– Jim Giese

Legion Offers College Scholarships

Greenbelt American Legion Post 136 is sponsoring the annual American Legion National High School Oratorical Contest again this year. Applications are now being accepted for the contest, which will have its first round at the local level on Saturday, January 12.

Students are required to present speeches on topics related to the U.S. Constitution. Young orators will receive some of the most generous college scholarships available to high school students. Scholarships may be used to attend any college or university in the United States. High school students under age 20 are eligible to apply to participate.

The goal of the American Legion Oratorical Contest is to foster the development of a deeper knowledge and appreciation of the U.S. Constitution among high school students. Since 1938, the program has presented participants with an academic speaking challenge that teaches leadership qualities, the history of our nation’s laws, the ability to think and speak clearly and an understanding of the duties, responsibilities, rights and privileges of American citizenship.

Competition begins at the local post level and then advances to a state competition. Legion officials certify one winner per state to the national contest, where contestants compete against each other in two speaking rounds. The contest caps off with a round that decides the three top finalists.

For information on applying, a parent or guardian of the student should contact Paul Durance of Legion Post 136 at 301-814-7694 or rsvp2paul@gmail.com. Additional information on the contest is also available at legion.org.

Participants will contribute to the lives of others and assist them to live better in the current economic times, while developing a stronger sense of community.

County’s 2035 Plan
Online Tools Unveiled

The Prince George’s County Planning Department decided at its November 1 meeting to launch an online “Plan Prince George’s 2035 Interactive” suite of tools to educate, inform and engage the community.

Scheduled are an interactive website and Facebook and Twitter pages providing new ways to share ideas about key issues affecting the county as planners work to develop the General Plan. That plan, which is updated after each decennial census, looks broadly and strategically at how the county should continue to grow, strengthen and invest its resources. It also aims to address existing and new priorities for public safety, economic development, transportation, housing, community health, infrastructure and sustainability.

Slated to be open for contributions in fall 2013, the on-line tools will enable residents, business owners, community leaders, elected and appointed officials to get involved in a number of ways. There will be forums, blogs and polls at the website, community forums on key county issues and a scenario planning tool to help users better understand key priorities and how various choices may impact the future. Those without home access to the internet will be able to participate at community centers and libraries, as well as at the forums and other in-person meetings.

For more information call the planning board at 301-952-4584; TTY 301-952-4366 or visit www.pgplanning.org.

were “turned around” so that the kitchen and utility room were on the street side and the living room was on the rear or garden side of the house. The federal government screened housing applicants according to very subjective criteria and rented to families of moderate income ($1,000 to $2,000 per year). Greendale was incorporated as a village in November 1938 and in 1953 the undeveloped land, municipal and commercial buildings were purchased by the private Milwaukee Community Development Corporation.

The Greendale Historic District was listed in the Wisconsin State Register of Historic Places and the National Register of Historic Places in 2005. In 2011 Society staff conducted additional research and co-authored the 123-page report that led to the current National Historic Landmark designation. Daina Penkiunas, who presented the nomination to the Landmark Review Committee in Washington, D.C., said: “At Greendale we see the development of the modern American suburb. It holds a unique and important place in the history of American urban planning.”

the department in 1994, Dewey became a field training officer and collision reconstruction expert. He also spent 10 years in the K9 unit, winning with his dog Rambo two coveted Triple Crown awards for excellence in patrol tactics and drug detection.

Craze said that he chose Dewey as Officer of the Year again for serving as the in-house expert on the department's computer-aided dispatching and records management system, for which Dewey had the "unequivocal support and admiration of the entire department."

Park Police

Lieutenant Warren Boyer of the United States Park Police, Greenbelt Station, announced Officer Benjamin Tomasiello as his units Officer of the Year. Tomasiello, who joined the Park Police in 2009, has demonstrated an outstanding dedication to duty, Boyer explained. While assigned to patrol the Baltimore-Washington Parkway, Tomasiello has made numerous arrests, many for DWI, and issued a large number of traffic citations. He received a letter of commendation from the U.S. Park Police for his exceptional work in assisting a victim of an assault that led to the arrest of the perpetrator.

Firefighter of Year

Chief Thomas Ray of the GVFD named Augustine Garcia as Firefighter of the Year, noting his dedication, willingness to help and the level of training he had completed. Ray also announced the EMT of the Year, Sarah Kessel. He cited her "impressive" amount of work since joining the department in March, making special note of the fact she had paid for her own training coursework.

Life Member

A standing ovation was also given to GVFD President and Life Member Kenneth Stair when Ray announced Stair's recent induction into the Prince George's County Volunteer Fire and Rescue Hall of Fame.

Public Works

David Gross was named by Jim Sterling of the Greenbelt Public Works Department as Employee of the Year. Sterling explained that in 2005, FEMA designated public works employees as first responders for emergencies.

He praised Gross for his hard work, positive attitude and dependability in his 25 years with the department. Gross is an experienced truck driver and part of the snow removal team. He served as acting supervisor for four years.

County Recognition

At the conclusion of the ceremony, Ingrid Turner recognized all members of the GVFD and, on behalf of the county, presented the department with a check for $2,500.

Moore and Williams of the Legion concluded the event by remarking that "there is a special place in our hearts and minds" for first responders and that the awards ceremony was a small gesture of thanks. After hearing these stories of courage and dedication to duty and to the community, there was no doubt that all in the room agreed.

Utopia Film Fest Draws Worldwide Filmmakers

by Susan Gervasi

Greenbelt's recent Utopia Film Festival 2012, from October 13 through 21, welcomed filmmakers from as far away as Canada, Mexico and Hawaii and hosted almost 800 viewers for more than 50 independent films that were screened in a variety of Utopia programs.

Now in its eighth year, Utopia is an annual project of nonprofit Greenbelt Access Television (GATE), with assistance from the Maryland Film Office, the City of Greenbelt and other sponsors.

"I absolutely loved Greenbelt and the vibe at the Utopia Film Festival," said director Gail Mooney-Kelly, whose film, "Opening Our Eyes: Global Stories About the Power of One," received the Utopian Visions Award, one of four awards each year given by the festival. "I only wish I could have stayed longer," she said. "I hope to return to Greenbelt very soon."

The Utopian Visions Award goes annually to the work best typifying the festival's motto "seeking a better world through film." "Opening Our Eyes," by New Jersey resident Mooney-Kelly, her daughter Erin Kelly and husband Tom Kelly, explores the lives of people throughout the world dedicated to helping others.

Best Short Film

Pamela Davis of Honolulu, Hawaii, won the Best Short Film award for "Rusti Escapes!" her short documentary about the plight of a homeless orangutan.

"We loved the Utopia Film Festival," said Davis, who attended the event with her son Scott. "It lived up to its Utopian name. Every film conveyed a positive message and the staff and filmmakers were all very friendly and welcoming."

"Rusti Escapes!" is Davis' first film and Utopia her first film festival. She said she appreciated learning about Greenbelt's unique history "and your sense of community, carried on from the original development of Greenbelt."

North Carolina director-actress Tara-Nicole Azarian, age 14, received Utopia's "Best Young Filmmaker Award" for her short feature "Cardboard."

Azarian, a professional television actress who has been working in Hollywood for the last six months, attended Utopia with her mother, Jen Azarian. Tara-Nicole was 12 when she wrote, directed and starred in "Cardboard," about the plight of a middle-class family who loses its home.

"My favorite [film] was "Cardboard" because it exemplified the homelessness which I see each time I go into D.C.," said Dea Zugby, who managed the festival's opening night reception and praised "the sensitivity of the young filmmaker."

Creativity Award

The fourth Utopia award, "The Eleanor Roosevelt Award for Creativity," went to director John Roberts for his short work "The Wheel." Roberts could not attend the festival but said he appreciated the honor and hoped to visit Greenbelt in the future.

Legendary jazz saxophonist Buck Hill, a Greenbelt resident, attended both the Utopia reception and, with producer Tom Walker, the Utopia screening of a film about Washington D.C.'s jazz history in which he appears: "Oxygen for the Ears: Living Jazz."

From a technical perspective, Utopia committee members agreed that this year's all-volunteer-run festival ran smoothly.

"There were no glitches that I saw," said Connie Davis, who organizes volunteers for the festival. "We got positive responses from the filmmakers and film viewers."

Davis, a former math teacher at Eleanor Roosevelt High School, was particularly impressed by the standing-room-only crowd for the math/science film, "In the Footsteps of Newton," whose Indiana director, Nancy Rodgers, attended the festival.

Mexican director John Urich-Sass, who directed the documentary "God Has Arrived" and who also attended the festival, said he thought Greenbelt was a beautiful city and was "glad the festival was held before Hurricane Sandy."

Susan Gervasi served as Utopia 2012 coordinator.

Police Are Again Reaccredited With Top Honors from CALEA

On November 17 the Greenbelt Police Department was granted unconditional Accreditation with Excellence from the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies, Inc. (CALEA) at the organization's November conference in Jacksonville, Fla.

This is the highest form of reaccreditation an agency can receive. Of the 107 undergoing accreditation/reaccreditation hearings, only 17 reached the Accreditation with Excellence milestone.

Greenbelt police received initial accreditation in 2006, a process that provides a rigorous reaccreditation process every three years. This year's on-site assessment took place in April and was the department's third accreditation bid. CALEA's accreditation program is designed to improve a department's delivery of public safety services and to recognize excellence by maintaining a body of standards developed by public safety peers in a wide range of public safety initiatives.

Pepco Sets Direct Online Link To Report Streetlight Outages

Pepco has announced the launch of an upgraded streetlight reporting system that uses pole numbers and addresses to report outages online. With one click customers can access maps showing streetlight locations with the Bing mapping system. When a problem is reported, the new system sends the person who filed it an email with tracking number, location and pole number.

When submitted for repair, an icon on the map will appear red;

once repaired, the icon returns to green and confirmation is sent to notify the reporters. Pepco expects the new system to give consistent feedback to outage reports and restoration. It also allows Pepco to record outage data for streetlights and reduce data problems that cause extended outages.

A link to the new reporting system is on www.pepco.com under Alerts and Outage Information.

Nazi Netherlands Occupation Talk Given by L. Penney

by Kathleen McFarland

On September 8, with wind swirling and rain banging at the wide windows of the Garden Room in Renaissance Gardens, her new home, Leonie Penney captivated a large audience of family, friends and residents of Riderwood with the story of her life before, during and after the Nazi occupation of Holland in World War II. The official title of her talk was “Memories of a Holocaust Survivor in the Netherlands.”

Leonie began her talk by hoping the audience could understand her Dutch accent, which she has never lost. She sat in a chair. Her voice was not as strong as it once was so Leonie was instructed to lean close to the microphone as she read from her carefully prepared paper.

She told us these would be her own memories, her personal story and reactions. She explained that in Holland, religion took a less important role in society than here in the United States; that her family was Jewish but non-religious; that Jews were encouraged to assimilate into the larger society.

Leonie Snatager was born in 1918 in The Hague, an only child – but with 15 cousins. Of the cousins, only six survived the Holocaust. She said this was better than the survival average for Dutch Jews as a whole, which was three out of 14. She said it was fortunate her father had died in 1935, sparing him the horror of what was to come.

Studies Economics

In the late 1930s, Leonie went off to the University of Amsterdam to study economics, while her mother moved from their large house to a smaller apartment in The Hague. At the university, Leonie loved studying; in her words, she was “free as a bird” and joined a group of intellectual, idealistic young people who were certain they knew how to “improve the world.”

One of her friends there was Etty Hillesum, a brilliant young Jewish woman now famous for her writings, which have been published and translated into English in a large book Leonie had by her side: “Etty: Letters and Diaries of Etty Hillesum, 1941-43.”

On May 10, 1940, Leonie was wakened by the loud noise of airplanes flying overhead. They were German planes on their way to “pulverize” Rotterdam. Smoke could be seen on the horizon. Holland was warned that other cities would be bombed if they did not capitulate. The royal family fled.

Leonie and her mother decided she should move back to the apartment in The Hague and commute to college in Amsterdam. She received her master’s degree in economics in December 1940. Later she realized how lucky she had been, since by the next year Jews were no longer admitted to the university; they had to wear and show the yellow Star of David and were not allowed to use public transportation.

In a way, Leonie said, the Dutch had simplified the Germans’ task of persecuting the Jews in two ways: they kept meticulous records of the religion of each citizen and in Holland “there were no mountains to hide in.”

The seriousness of the situation began to dawn on the Jews, including Leonie’s family. With the help of non-Jewish friends, they were able to transfer money to banks in London and to send valuables such as silverware and family photographs to safe-keeping with friends. Even Leonie’s portable typewriter survived!

Hiding Places

People started to look for places to hide from the Germans. This was not so easy, as the penalty for those who were found hiding the Jews was death.

The Germans took over the apartment Leonie and her mother had lived in and they were put out onto the street, leaving their furniture behind.

Her mother and her mother’s sister went to different places to stay with friends, while Leonie went to stay with a couple who had been like second parents to her after her father died. She told them she did not want to hide.

Leonie had admired her idealistic friend Etty, who wanted to keep and share the centuries-old Jewish Fate; but after much thought, and especially after she found out that women’s hair was cut off in the labor camps, Leonie changed her mind. “My hair was very important to me,” she said. It was reddish, like her father’s. She decided then to go into hiding. When she told her hosts of her decision, they thought it over and told her the risk was too large for her to stay there; she had to find another place to live.

First she had to get a false I.D. Through friends in the Underground, she obtained papers belonging to a woman named Jane Lamberts; the photo of Jane was replaced with her own.

But becoming “Jane Lamberts” was not easy. She became despondent, even at one point attempting suicide with aspirin. But suddenly she was overcome with a strong desire to live and threw away the aspirin. Finally, hope was restored when an old friend from college days asked her to come and see his apartment. She realized then that this was an invitation to hide. Her friend, Loet, whose father was leader of a well-known orchestra, even offered to take in her mother temporarily. They gratefully accepted the invitation.

Jane Lamberts

Then Leonie embarked on a series of experiences as “Jane Lamberts,” employed as a nanny or maid in many different households. If you remember the TV show “Upstairs, Downstairs,” Leonie had grown up in an Upstairs environment but now had to function in a Downstairs role. In her talk she told of moving from one household to another, even being taken to a hospital for a medical procedure by doctors from the Dutch underground, all the time with fear of being detected.

Once she had to move from a household because of a suspicious maid. At another home, the cook turned out to have worked in her own family’s kitchen. Another time, she overheard women discussing Ayn Rand’s book “The Fountainhead” and longed to join in the discussion, since she herself had just read the book.

She mentioned at one party being “tipped” for her service; how ironic, since others were paying large sums of money to be hidden from the Nazis.

I thought to myself, as Leonie’s talk went on, “What a good movie this would make.” But there was more to come.

D-Day, June 6, 1944. Radios were forbidden but there was a hidden radio in the kitchen of the house where Leonie was living. Everyone listened to the BBC broadcasts. There was joy when they heard about the Americans landing in Normandy. “What excitement!” “What camaraderie in that kitchen!”

On August 9, 1944, Leonie had been visiting her mother and her mother’s sister, who were hiding in a house in a neighborhood not far from the Anne Frank house. Leonie had traveled to Amsterdam by train a few days earlier and left that evening. The next day, her mother and aunt were arrested.

A man from the Underground, who had lived in the house previously, was caught. When the Nazis came to search the house, they found the elderly ladies. When news of this reached the house Leonie was living in, she realized she could be questioned and that the situation had become more dangerous for her as well. She began a period of moving from place to place, living for short times at different addresses.

Important Changes

The situation was changing in the Netherlands. In September 1944 “Operation Garden Market” took place, the Allied assault on German troops. Unfortunately, the Allied troops lost. This was the battle featured in the movie “A Bridge Too Far.”

The Dutch railroads had helped the Allies by going on strike to prevent German troops from receiving support. But after defeating the Allied invasion, the Germans stopped all imports of food, coal for heating and other necessities. There was no food or drinking water. The Dutch starved; some ate tulip bulbs in this “Hunger Winter.” The Germans then began picking up all Dutch males and transporting them to slave-labor camps.

With Dutch men now being the ones more at risk, it was easier for Leonie to get jobs. Her last “place” was in the country, near Utrecht. Leonie went through the hunger winter there. The Dutch owner of the house was hiding in his own house to avoid the labor camps. Leonie used a bicycle to look for food, sometimes bartering apples for potatoes. There was no water for washing; everyone was dirty and they all had head lice.

Liberation

Finally, May 5, 1945: Liberation Day. They were liberated by Canadian troops bringing cigarettes and chocolate bars. After the liberation, Leonie immediately traveled to the camp at Westerbork to look for her mother and her aunt. She was told that her mother was not there, that she had been transported away, but to leave her address in case her mother would return. “At that time,” Leonie murmured, “no one had heard yet about the gas chambers.”

Leonie got a bike, a necessity to get around, and biked to Utrecht to visit cousins who had survived. There, she said, “a fantastic thing happened.” They had a baby! Her male cousin had gotten married and there was now a baby.

“To see this new life,” Leonie said, after all that misery, “was wonderful.” The father had been hiding in his wife’s parents’ house. Nuns had helped the mother with the baby. Fourteen people had been hiding in the house, yet no one had talked.

Leonie then started working as a student nurse, volunteering at an American Jewish organization, then at a Dutch kibbutz, working in the land. Finally she got a job with the Netherlands Central Bank. She was the “right person at the right time,” she said. They were trying to rebuild the economy. She asked at the World Bank if they could use a Dutch economist. It turned out they could. The Bank even paid her way to America.

She arrived in August 1948, 64 years ago. She met her husband, Walter Penney, in 1950 and “had a wonderful time for 50 years,” she said. He died in 2000. She had three children, 11 grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren. “Hitler, Eat Your Heart Out!” cried Leonie.

Leonie ended her talk by mentioning the things she has learned from her experience, which she has taught her children: To be self-reliant and to realize the value of a college education. “Look what it did for me!” she exclaimed.

Last, she mentioned something she is proud of: her eldest great-granddaughter is named “Jane Victoria” for her false identity, Jane Lamberts.

Audience Response

As the talk ended, someone from the back of the room, having learned that Leonie had been an economist with the World Bank, called out: “That was the most eloquent talk I’ve ever heard given by an economist.” Then Dr. Leo Walder, one of Leonie’s Greenbelt friends who was in attendance, stood and mentioned Leonie’s community service in Greenbelt and her selection as Outstanding Citizen of Greenbelt in 2008. All the Greenbelt people were asked to stand. There were quite a few.

Leonie then introduced her family members, including son Bernard and his daughters, who had come from North Carolina to hear her speak, daughter Olga with her husband and several children and grandson Walter, who was filming the talk.

Susanna Levin, the moderator from the Jewish Community of Riderwood who sponsored the talk, asked for questions and a short discussion ensued. All emphasized the importance of telling these stories of the Holocaust to keep the memories alive and ensure that such a time never happens again.

One of the attendees was Leo Bretholz, another Holocaust survivor who saved himself by jumping off a train headed to Auschwitz. He wrote a book about his experiences titled “Leap into Darkness.”

Leonie had with her two other books, in Dutch: “Zogaan we Al-lemaal” by her cousin Herman Snatager, who did not survive, and “In the Shadow of Doom,” by Jan Willem Regenhart, a book about her cousins who had the baby – as well as the book about Etty Hillesum previously mentioned. Etty died in Auschwitz on November 30, 1943.
